

Emily Roland, CIMA

Co-Chief Investment Strategist

Emily is responsible for developing and delivering timely market and economic insight to financial advisors and institutional investors across the country. She has been featured on CNBC and Bloomberg TV, and is quoted frequently in the financial press, including the Wall Street Journal, Barron's, and the Associated Press. She is a highly rated keynote speaker at a variety of industry conferences and events.

Emily leads the development of John Hancock Investments' flagship quarterly market outlook publication, Market Intelligence. In doing so, she oversees the firm's investment committee, which sets the view by marrying insight from the firm's global network of asset managers, independent research firms, broker-dealers, and banks with top-down fundamental and macro analysis.

Emily joined the company's investments division in 2004 and has held several positions in product management, competitive intelligence, and market and industry research over the past 15 years. Prior to joining John Hancock, she held roles at GMO and the Boston Stock Exchange. Emily earned an M.B.A. from Boston College and a B.B.A. from James Madison University, and holds the Certified Investment Management Analyst designation.
